THE TWIN CITIES

Urbana and Champaign

The question is often asked, How does it come that two thrifty, wide-awake cities should be located side by side, built up solidly together so that you cannot tell where one quits and the other begins: The answer is: Urbana was created the county seat of Champaign county, Illinois by an act of the legislature on Feb. 20, 1833. Twenty-one years later the Illinois Central railroad built its line from Chicago to Cairo, crossing two miles west of the court house, and built its station there, afterwards calling it Chamj aign.

The older city, Urbana, is located on the Big Four and Wabash Railroads, with interurban electrical railroad connections in many directions.

The Big Four Railroad, running east and west, is of the most importance, on account of its large car and repair works being located here, employing 600 men, with a pay roll of $35,000 per month. It is the division point of this road, where the trains are made up on this line.

The manufacturing of brick is an important industry, employing 150 men with an annual pay roll of $30,000.

The county fair ground, and Chautauqua grounds are located here. The parks are large and possess great natural beauty.

Urbana's financial institutions are of the best and most ably managed—four banks and three loan associations. The business of the city is rapidly increasing, owing to the solidity and energy of the many firms engaged in mercantile pursuits. The business district has doubled in size in the last eight years. The business center of Urbana has three splendid public buildings, the Champaign county court house and jail, the city hall, and the best theatre building in the central part of Illinois.

But Urbana is most widely known as an educational center. Its public schools are of great importance and high standing. Yet the fact that on Feb. 28th, 1867, the legislature of the state of Illinois passed an act permanently locating the University of Illinois in Urbana has made Urbana famous as the great seat of learning of the west. This institution has an attendance of 4,700 students and costs for running expenses alone about one million dollars per annum.

While Urbana boasts of many attainments through self-sacrifice and farsightedness, her splendid twin, Champaign, has not been idle. While she is younger she is larger, and along with her older sister enjoys great beauty in miles of paved streets, well kept lawns and splendid residences. Champaign is known widely as a commercial center. Its extensive stores extend their influence far out into the rich adjoining territory. It is located at the crossing of the Illinois Central north and south, on the Big Four and Wabash east and west, and is the central offices of the Illinois Traction System.

The Illinois Central Railroad has a round-house, and do considerable repair work here. It is also a division point on this road.

Champaign's public buildings are good and in keeping with their surroundings. They are the Free Library, city building, opera house and a new Federal Building. The latter built on beautiful architectural lines, large and commodious, is well fitted for the work of the post office and work connected with it.

The public schools are of high order and even with the most advanced in buildings, equipment and management.

The parks of Champaign are noteworthy, well kept, large and beautiful.

Both cities may well boast of their houses of worship. All the leading religious denominations are well housed; many have churches of exceptional beauty and utility, and all well attended. Many are supplied with ministers of wide reputation as pulpit orators.

The Champaign County Fair and Driving Association grounds adjoin the Northern corporate limits of the city of Urbana, and consist of about 50 acres of beautiful wooded rolling land, with excellent speed track, large amphitheatre, and the grounds are splendidly equipped and improved.

The executive offices are situated at the northern end of Orchard street. The entrances are one from Orchard street and two from Coler avenue.

Woodlawn Cemetery is located on Coler avenue just north of the fair grounds.
